

CALL FOR PAPERS

SCHOLE: A JOURNAL OF LEISURE STUDIES AND RECREATION EDUCATION LEARNING ACTIVITY SECTION

Scholé: The Journal of Recreation and Leisure Education seeks short manuscripts on conceptually/theoretically based learning activities. Appropriate learning activities include those that facilitate students' learning and involvement in the application of concepts and development of their own expertise.

Each learning activity submission will undergo peer review to assess the manuscript based on three aspects: connections between the conceptual foundation and the learning activity, the feasibility and clarity of the activity implementation, and the ability of the activity to make complex issues relevant to the current generation of students. The goal is to spark innovative teaching practices in the classroom by sharing among professional peers.

Each manuscript should provide (a) a brief introduction to the content (i.e., theory, concepts, or legal issues), (b) the theoretical/practical foundation that connects the content to the delivery design, (c) a complete description of the learning activity, (d) the desired outcomes for learners, and (e) recommendations for its use by others (specific courses, target population, adaptations). Please note that manuscripts should be between 4-8 pages in length.

Guidelines for Contributors to the Learning Activity session:

1. Manuscripts will be accepted for review by the Editors with the understanding that they have not already been published, and that if accepted for publication in Scholé, that the manuscripts will not be published elsewhere without permission of the Co-Editors.
2. All manuscripts should be in American English. Papers should be double-spaced (including abstract and references) and pages numbered consecutively with 1" margins.
3. The author's name should appear only on the title page. Begin the title page with the title of the article, the author's name, address, telephone number and email address.
